Editorial: “The International Journal of Indonesian Studies [IJIS] is proud to present its inaugural issue. There are of course many people to thank. We thank firstly our contributors without whom this project could not have commenced. With similar gratitude, the Editors also acknowledge the generous and heartfelt support from our Editorial Board. It has been your patience, advice and willingness to act as mentors, and in many cases reviewers, that has made this first step possible. IJIS has developed from a simple idea discussed among the Editors in August 2012: we wanted to create a peer reviewed, English language, international, open access online journal that specifically showcases the quality research of early career Indonesian scholars, and that promotes intercultural learning/dialogues through the collaborative works of scholars from Indonesia and other countries in the world. In this way, we believe, IJIS can make a contribution to promoting new Indonesian scholarship in a variety of disciplines. Indonesia is continuing to develop in regional stature and influence in South East Asia, the Asia-Pacific Region, as well as internationally. For these reasons, a journal such as IJIS is deemed crucial in facilitating greater understanding of Indonesia’s culture, language, politics, economy, history, its challenges and its human and natural resources, so as to help clarify the role Indonesia can play in each of these contexts. We ask for your support firstly in disseminating news of IJIS’s “birth” through your networks; second, in constructive critique of this collaborative project; third, and most importantly, contributing your work for publication in future issues.”
